DELAY PICTURE TAKING ONE DAY

Lincoln Highway Film People a Little Behind their Schedule. Effort to Have them here Memorial Day Fails.

Gettysburg will not be filmed to-morrow for the Lincoln Highway movie feature, but it is announced as definite that the pictures will be taken on Thursday, the crew arriving here Wednesday evening. This gives all of to-morrow to decorate and prepare to present the town at its best for one of the greatest moving picture features ever prepared.

That the pictures are not to be taken here next Monday, Memorial Day, is through no fault of the local guarantors who did everything in their power to postpone the event.

S. S. Neely, Esq., the local consul of the Lincoln Highway Association, in a telephone conversation Monday evening with the head of the picture taking committee, learned that they were several days behind their schedule time and that it would require all of to-day for them to finish taking scenes in and about Coatesville. Lancaster is due to be filmed to-morrow.

Mr. Neely pointed out the great advantage of visiting Gettysburg on Memorial Day. He told Mr. Ostermann, in charge of the work, that permission had been secured to erect a platform in the National Cemetery for the taking of the strewing of flowers by the children; he told of the parade, the large crowds likely to be here, and the many other features of a Memorial Day at Gettysburg which would make this section of the film one of the best in the entire ten reels.

Mr. Ostermann was duly impressed with Mr. Neely's argument and consented to do everything in his power to make arrangements so that the stay in Gettysburg would include next Monday, but this morning it was found that, to grant the request would mean that the squad would have to go out to Everett Saturday and return to Gettysburg specially for the event, entailing an expense too great to permit the scheme being carried out.

The local arrangements are in charge of Mr. Neely and Robert C. Miller, who urge specially that the town decorate extensively and that everything possible be done to give Gettysburg the very best appearance for the feature. When it is considered that the films will be shown in thousands of moving picture houses all over the country and that the town will be advertised more extensively than it has ever been possible to do it in any other way, the importance of acceding to the request of the local guarantors may be plainly seen.

People are asked to come in from the country, and to turn out in full in town, during the process of the picture taking.

WOMEN ORGANIZE

Cashtown Suffragists Elect their Officers. Plan Picnic.

Monday afternoon, Mrs. E. B. Binz, State Suffrage organizer for the five counties of Perry, Cumberland, Franklin, Adams and York, held a suffrage meeting at Cashtown in the home of Mrs. William R. Rebert.

The ladies present were very enthusiastic for the cause and organized with Miss Maud C. Mickley, chairman; Mrs. Edward Bucher, vice chairman; Miss Elizabeth Deal, secretary; Mrs. William R. Rebert, treasurer; Mrs. David Biesecker, chairman of literature committee; and Mrs. George Swartz, chairman of enrollment committee.

The Cashtown suffragists are planning a picnic to all the citizens to put the question of suffrage properly before all the voters.

FOR MORE WORK AT POST OFFICE

Will Place Wood on Granite Steps in Order to Prevent Accidents in Cold Weather. Will Paint Parapet. Bids are Asked.

Postmaster Duncan is distributing to local carpenters and painters the specifications and plans for work to be done at the Federal Building next month.

The carpenters have been asked to bid on the construction of a chute for the parcel post drop. At present it is so arranged that any one could simply lift the lid and remove any package desired. The chute will connect with a large basket and safeguard the mail. The bids for this work are to be in before June first.

The painters have been given specifications for painting the interior of the parapet of the building. The parapet is the uppermost course of granite, surrounding the roof. The interior of this "wall" is of brick and the painting will be done to protect it against water.

Mr. Duncan also has in his possession the plans and specifications for the construction of wooden steps to fit over the granite steps leading from the street into the post office. It is not likely that these will be put down before cold weather but they will be for the purpose of protecting patrons from the very slippery condition of the granite which always results in snow and icy weather.

The contract for painting the plaster of the Federal Building was awarded to a southern contractor about two months ago. He was given ninety days in which to complete the work but, up to this time, nothing has been heard from him. It is said that his bid was from $500 to $600 lower than the actual cost of the work and material, and, not being required to post any certified check for the proper fulfillment of the contract, there is no way to compel him to do the work. It is likely that bids for this will again be asked.

MAKE THEIR PLANS

Automobiles Needed to Take Committees over Roads.

The suffrage committee on Good Roads will start from the Court House at 11 o'clock sharp Wednesday. The automobiles engaged should be there promptly to convey the ladies with lunches—four ladies to each car—to the proper places.

No doubt all the machines in town will be needed to take out workmen and bring them home after the unaccustomed and arduous toil on the roads and we hope voluntary supervisors will not exceed in numbers those using pick and shovel.

KILLED SITTING ON THE RAILROAD

Life Long Resident of Highfield Meets Horrible Death. Body Removed to his Home for Burial. Was Widely Known Man.

Charles Edward Gall, Highfield, a section foreman on the Western Maryland, was run over by a freight train Sunday night about 10:30 o'clock near Guilford and instantly killed.

His body was found Monday morning about 5:30 o'clock along the track badly mangled. Mr. Gall had been working near Guilford, and Sunday evening went to call on some people he knew there.

On his way home it is thought that he sat down along the track and fell asleep. It was a freight train that ran over him, causing his death. His head was almost severed from his body and there were many bruises and abrasions.

Monday afternoon the body was taken to his home at Highfield. The funeral will take place Thursday morning, services in Bethel church. Interment will be made in the adjoining graveyard.

Mr. Gall was a resident of Highfield practically all his life. He was the son of John and Susan Gall. For the past fifteen years he has been employed on the section gang of the Western Maryland. Two years ago he was made section foreman.

He is survived by his widow and three children.

Mr. Mundorff had just finished supper and was walking from the dining room to the kitchen when he toppled over and fell in a heap on the floor where he died in a few moments. At the table he complained of pain at his heart but he believed that it was from indigestion from which he had suffered at various times.

Mr. Mundorff was born in Littlestown, a son of Leander and Sophia Mundorff and he had been a resident of Gettysburg for the past twenty five years, conducting a blacksmith shop on South Washington street. Before coming here he was engaged in the same business near Quarry School in Highland township. She was a resident of Fairfield for her entire life, except the past few years. Mr. Schertzer was a veteran of the Civil War and for a number of years was postmaster of Fairfield.

She leaves one brother, David C. Shulley, of Fairfield, and one sister, Mrs. Eliza Sprengle, of Waynesboro.

Funeral Wednesday morning at 10:00 o'clock from the Lutheran church at Fairfield. Interment in Union cemetery, Fairfield.

The body has been taken to Rockford for interment.

FLORENCE PANEBAKER

From whooping cough and pneumonia, Florence Anna Panebaker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Noah Panebaker Conewago township, died Saturday morning, aged 3 years, 7 months, and 17 days.

The big thing about PICNIC TWIST is the naturally sweet, long-lasting satisfaction of the mild, mellow part of the leaf. You can chew more PICNIC TWIST than you can of a dark, rank, "heavy" tobacco, and have no "come-back" on your nerves from it.

ITALIAN EAST COAST SHELLED

Austrian Sea and Air Attacks Are Repulsed.

THE DAMAGE IS SMALL

Germans Plan Rapid Drive of Von Hindenburg Through Adige Valley on Center of Italian Defense.

Rome, May 25.—Austria-Hungary opened hostilities against Italy by a combined aerial and naval attack on several ports of the Adriatic coast from Venice as far south as Barletta, north of Bari, a total distance of over 255 miles.

The attack failed, according to an official announcement made by the Italian government, the Austrian forces being forced to withdraw.

Austrian aeroplanes, flying from Pola, the naval base, appeared over Venice and attempted to hurl bombs on the arsenal. Anti-aircraft guns at the forts guarding Venice blazed away at the invaders, while Italian airmen and a dirigible flying over the Adriatic came to the rescue. The Austrians were driven off.

At about the same time other Austrian aircraft attacked the ports of Porto Corsini, sixty miles south of Venice; Ancona, eighty miles farther south; and Gosl, fourteen miles below Ancona. Austrian torpedo boats and a small scout steamer made an attack on Barletta, about thirty-three miles north of Bari, and a slight naval engagement followed, the Italian vessels forcing the Austrians to flee to the northward.

The official statement is as follows: "An Italian destroyer entered the harbor of Porto Buso, a small island close to the Austrian frontier. The destroyer bombarded the port, destroying the quay, landing stage and military barracks. The destroyer sank a flotilla of motor boats in the harbor. She suffered no damage and there were no casualties among her crew."

"The enemy lost two men killed and forty-seven prisoners. The prisoners include one officer and fifteen non-commissioned officers. They were taken to Venice."

"Small naval units of the enemy, especially destroyers and torpedo boats, fired their guns upon our Adriatic coast on May 24. At the same time aeroplanes attempted to attack the arsenal at Venice."

"The enemy's ships, after a very short cannonade, were forced by our torpedo boats to withdraw. The enemy's aeroplanes were fired upon by our anti-aircraft artillery and attacked by our aeroplanes and by a dirigible flying over the Adriatic."

"The aeroplanes attacked Porto Corsini, which replied immediately and obliged the enemy to quickly retire. At Ancona, where the attack was directed especially against the railway line, with the intention of interrupting communication, slight damage was inflicted, which can be repaired easily."

"At Barletta an attack was made by a scout steamer and destroyers, which were put to flight by one of our ships, which was escorted by torpedo boats. Finally at Gosl, the enemy's aeroplanes attempted to throw bombs upon the harbor, but without reaching the mark."

The German plan of campaign, it is generally believed, will be an attempt to inflict a quick and decisive defeat, or at least one that will discourage the Italians, by Field Marshal von Hindenburg.

It is said that German troops, with heavy guns, aeroplanes and Zeppelins, are already passing through the valley of the river Adige in the direction of Verona, and that rapid and fierce blows will be delivered almost immediately at the Italian center.

This, the Germans doubtless believe, would serve to hold off an Italian advance from the province of Venice, where the flat nature of the country would give the Italians a greater chance of success.

Throughout Austria and Germany there is bitter denunciation of Italy, which for the moment has replaced England as the most hated enemy. In the allied countries, on the other hand, Italian intervention is hailed with delight, and in the Italian quarters of London and Paris there have been enthusiastic demonstrations and cheering farewells to the Italians leaving for home to join the colors.

Rumania, Greece and Bulgaria as yet have made no move. The government of Bulgaria has reiterated that it will continue to observe an attitude of neutrality so long as Bulgarian interests are not directly affected, and it sees no reason why they should be.

RUSSIAN LINE IS ON THE OFFENSIVE

Foes Sharply Checked in Galicia, Petrograd Claims.

London, May 25.—A dispatch to the Daily News from Petrograd says:

"The Kaiser on Saturday night left Jaroslavl, Galicia, and journeyed westward in the deepest dejection. General von Hindenburg had warned him that the plan of a terrific blow on a short front looked well on paper, but that the Russians were likely to frustrate it and entangle the Austro-German troops for several weeks."

"Von Hindenburg proved right, and Generals von Mackensen and Eulich have abandoned the hopeless task of extricating the Germans from a 200-mile front."

"They have nobody to spare to resist the Russian advance from Pilica, where thousands of prisoners are taken daily."

"All reserves from inside Germany are now moving through Czenstochowa into Poland and none are going into Galicia, where the Russian army has secured the ascendancy and is mercilessly slaughtering the Germans, whose artillery is silent and without shells."

"It is reported that the Kaiser at Cracow urged the Austrians to make an heroic endeavor. They have sent troops southward to reinforce General von Boehm-Ermolli on the Italian frontier."

The Austro-German forces in Galicia have no resumed the defensive, and their operations consist chiefly of counter attacks, according to a statement issued by the headquarters of the Russian general staff. Slight progress is announced on the left bank of the lower San and the claim is made that all assaults by the Austro-German troops in the southeastern theater of operations were repulsed. The Austro-Germans are, however, still furiously battering the Russian line south of Przemyśl.

TEUTON ARMY 680,000 MEN

Twenty-four of its Thirty-four Divisions German.

The Hague, May 25.—From information reaching The Hague it is understood that the Germans and Austrians have concentrated approximately 680,000 men on the Italian frontier.

They have occupied strategic positions in order to meet an attack or to attempt to strike the first heavy blow, in an endeavor to dishearten the new combatants at the beginning of the campaign.

The Germans constitute the larger part of this force, which is made up of thirty-four divisions of approximately 20,000 men each. Only ten of these divisions are Austrians.

FIVE BLOWN TO DEATH ON DREDGE

Woman, Two Children and Two Men Killed.

TWO OTHERS ARE INJURED

Vessel Was Torn to Pieces in Delaware River Near Bordentown When Boiler Explodes.

Philadelphia, May 25.—Five persons, a woman, two children and two men, met death in the Delaware river opposite Bordentown, N. J., and two men were injured, when the boiler of a sand dredge on which they had been living exploded, throwing them into the water.

Those killed were: Mrs. Minnie Stout, twenty-two years old, of Gloucester, N. J., wife of the cook on the dredge.

Anna Stout, four years old, her daughter.

Harry Stout, two years old, her son. Tony Matlock, thirty years old, of Trenton, N. J.

John J. Varley, twenty-eight years old, of Bordentown.

Those hurt were: James McIntyre, captain of the dredge, and James McLaughlin.

Three bodies have been recovered, those of Mrs. Stout, the little girl and Varley. The man's skull was fractured. It is believed all were dead before they reached the water.

The dredge was the Delaware, owned by the Delaware River Sand Dredging company, of which Horace G. Reeder, of Bordentown, is the president. The dredge was wrecked by the explosion and sank end up. The upper deck was left visible.

The accident was caused by the water in the boiler running low. The boiler burst with a loud report.

James McIntyre, the captain of the dredge, was blown into the water and rescued by McLaughlin. Mrs. Stout and her children were in the cabin, just having finished their breakfast. Mrs. Stout was washing dishes and the children were playing about her. Varley had descended into the hold and prepared the engine for the day's work. Matlock jumped to the scow tied alongside the dredge to shovel the sand evenly as it was lifted from the bottom of the Delaware by an endless chain bucket arrangement attached to the hoisting apparatus.

The explosion occurred without a moment's warning. There was a tremendous noise, and persons working in the Riverview Iron works, on the Bordentown shore of the Delaware, were startled to see the dredge rise, bow first, out of the water. It settled on its stern for a second or two, and the next instant it was shattered. A shower of wood, iron and steel was hurled high into the air.

Mrs. Stout and her children were shot out of the cabin as though catapulted out of a cannon. They rose fully fifty feet into the air, according to the startled spectators on the Jersey shore, and then dropped into the water.

Varley was shot out of the hold and hurled towards the Pennsylvania shore. Matlock was hit by a huge piece of the boiler and fell into the river.

As soon as those on shore realized what had occurred a brigade was organized for an attempt at rescue.

GERMANS PREPARE TO FALL BACK

Invaders Will Withdraw Forces From Flanders.

London, May 25.—Although not confirmed from any official source, reports are published here that Germany, faced with Italy as a new foe in the south, will have to shorten her western line, and that consequently she is preparing to withdraw her men from the advanced line in Flanders. A reported evacuation of Bruges (Belgium) is said to be a part of this movement.

New Drive at Turks Fails.

Constantinople, May 25.—Official announcement was made here that an attack by the French and British forces on the Turkish positions near Seddul-Bahr, on the southern end of the Gallipoli peninsula, had been repulsed. It is stated that the allies left 2000 dead on the field.

The Turkish report says:

"We took a machine gun. During the battle a hostile aeroplane fell into the sea as a result of our fire. During nine hours of fighting we lost 240 wounded and forty-three killed."

"Our batteries on the shores of the Dardanelles damaged the enemy's ships and batteries near Seddul-Bahr. One of our batteries on the Asiatic side hit four times an enemy battleship. Another warship of the Vengeance type was hit by two shells. Only six of our gun crew were wounded."

The number of British and French troops landed along the Dardanelles has been increased to 90,000 additional reinforcements. Of the troops on shore about 4000 men are said to be incapacitated by illness. The original landing force was estimated at 60,000 men.

Germany Discloses List of Great Concessions Austria Offered to Keep King Victor Still Neutral.

OF ITALY NOW ANY TIME IN WAR

Italians, Frenzied For Appeal to Arms, Compel Parliament to Vote Free Hand to Cabinet.

WHATEVER else might be said of Italy's belated entrance into the war, it could not now be said, as it might have been a little while ago, that when all the hard work was done and the fight was won she rushed to the side of the victor merely to grab a share of the spoils. The reverse just sustained by the Russians shows the enormous military power of Germany and proves that if she is to be beaten the task is yet a long and severe one.

For longer than nine months the Italian government has been on the brink of war, while the people clamored for an attack upon their old foe. There was no quarrel with Germany except that she wanted to hold Italy to the triple alliance, but did not consult her before Europe was plunged into war. But with Austria there were old scores to settle and lost provinces to recover. Moreover, there was strong feeling throughout the country that Italy should help her friend France in any case. But Italy stood off, though, while her merchants amassed vast fortunes through the sudden extraordinary increase in business due to providing the depleted Germans with supplies, she continued to make great war preparations—and to negotiate.

Italy's Demands Secret.

The full extent of Italy's demands on Austria as the price of neutrality is not exactly known. Her ministers declare that they never made any proposals, but only received and rejected those made by Austria.

When it began to be obvious, as it must have been even to the German banja, which was already more Italian than Austria, for it is in possession of Italian forces landed there in December to suppress a revolt of Mohammedans.

For a few hours recently it seemed that Italy was on the point of coming to terms with Austria. Backed by General Bousset, the king's aide-de-camp, Signor Giolitti tried to separate Victor Emmanuel from his cabinet. His avowals for peace brought about a ministerial crisis in Rome. Premier Salandra resigned. But neither Giolitti himself nor any one else could form a new cabinet or even a coalition ministry.

On the eve of the meeting of parliament the fallen dictator, Giolitti, deserted by his friends and escorted by police to protect him from the mob, hastened from Rome to the shelter of his home in Piedmont, fleeing as once before he fled in the days of the Banca Romana scandals of twenty years ago. He declared he had been misunderstood.

Italy has 481 miles of Austrian frontier. Most of it lies in the Dolomites, where the peaks form a natural barrier and the passes are heavily fortified. Verona, the natural point from which to start the blow from Trent, is the terminus of the railroad from Innsbruck over the old Roman war route of the Brenner pass. Its thirty miles from the frontier are heavily fortified, and the farther thirty miles from the frontier to the city of Trent are fortified perhaps even more formidably.

Trieste Point of Attack. Trieste, while open to attack from the sea, is only 140 miles from Venice, and the road by way of Udine and the shorter one by Cervignano are both good. Italian feeling in Trieste has been so strong for days that the Austrians trained their own cannon on it and more than fifty persons were killed in the suppression of one riot in which the name of Francis Joseph was hoisted.

In her first line of troops Italy has 800,000. Behind these every regiment has its reserve, more than doubling the force, and altogether she has available 3,150,000 men. The first and second lines have been newly equipped with modern weapons based upon the experience already gained in the war.

Italy possesses now the most powerful machine guns in existence, capable of firing 1,400 bullets a minute, covering an area of 500 square yards. She has also adopted a new type of gun carriage, enabling the transport, even up steep mountains, of heavy siege guns, through a mechanism in the carriage which propels the cannon.

Her motorcar and aeroplane service, only a "Ring Off."

which had experience in Tripoli, has all been remodeled during the last nine months.

Italy's navy is one of the most powerful. Before the addition of her four new super-Dreadnoughts—C. Colombo, F. Morosini, Caracciolo and M. Colombo—it was regarded as stronger than that of Austria. Under the Duke of the Abruzzi it has been reorganized as a single unit under his command.

The recent ships of the Italian navy are generally regarded as representing the acme in naval architecture. The Dreadnoughts carry twelve inch guns of the British type, but the super-Dreadnoughts are of the British Queen Elizabeth type, and each carries eight fifteen-inch guns.

The French warships which have been guarding the Adriatic, blocking in the Austrian fleet, will now be available for service at the Dardanelles. It is assumed the Italian plan of campaign will involve a close inner blockade of the Austrian naval forces as a precaution against any transportation plans which the Austrians may have in mind as across the Adriatic.

For the present the bulk of the Austrian fleet is based on Pola, the naval arsenal lying below Trieste. The distance from Pola to Venice is only seventy-five miles, and to protect Venice from attack by sea it will be necessary for the Italian forces to bottle up the Austrian fleet where the latter is now anchored. It is doubted whether this can be accomplished without a major engagement at the head of the Adriatic.

The defenses of Pola were reported in the middle of April to have been completed, and the port was said to have been made impregnable against attack either from sea or land. Recently Austria has added to her flotilla of submarines twelve of the large German type, which fire twenty-two inch torpedoes and have a radius of action up to 3,000 miles.

Roumania Hesitates.

When Italy finally came off the brink it was almost certain that she would not be alone in doing so. Roumania has been "on the verge of war" ever since August, just as Italy, but without great offers of inducements to keep her out. It has been understood that Roumania and Italy had come to an understanding that they would strike simultaneously.

But while the Italian parliament was voting a free hand to King Victor's cabinet, together with a big war fund to back them, King Ferdinand of Roumania appeared to be hesitating. It was said the situation of the Russians at the moment looked too perilous for him and he would postpone his momentous decision until later. There was the grave fear that once Roumania moved Bulgaria would likewise start. In that case Ferdinand felt he might be caught between Bulgaria and victorious Austro-German forces.

Premier Salandra in his explanation to the Italian parliament said: "Since Italy's resurrection as a state she has asserted herself in the world of nations as a factor of moderation, concord and peace, and she can proudly proclaim that she has accomplished this mission with a firmness which has not wavered before even the most painful sacrifices."

Puts Blame on Austria.

"The ultimatum which the Austro-Hungarian empire addressed last July to Serbia annulled at one blow the effects of a long sustained effort by violating the pact which bound us to that state, violated the pact in form, for it omitted to conclude a preliminary agreement with us or even give us notification and violated it also in substance, for it sought to disturb, to our detriment, the delicate system of territorial possessions and spheres of influence which had been set up in the Balkan peninsula."

"But, more than any particular point, it was the whole spirit of the treaty which was wronged, and even suppressed, for by unloosing in the world a most terrible war, in direct contravention of our interests and sentiments, the balance which the triple alliance should have helped to assure was destroyed and the problem of Italy's national integrity was virtually and irretrievably revived."

"Nevertheless, for long months, the government has patiently striven to find a compromise, with the object of restoring to the agreement the reason for being which it had lost. These negotiations were, however, limited not only by time, but by our national dignity. Beyond these limits the interests both of our honor and of our country would have been compromised."

CHAPTER XXII.

Into the Desert.

A week after the caravan of the Duc de Tremont left Algeria, Julia Redmond came unexpectedly to the villa of Madame de la Maine at an early morning hour. Madame de la Maine saw her standing on the threshold of her bedroom door.

"Chere Madame," Julia said, "I am leaving today with a dragoman and twenty servants to go into the desert."

Madame de la Maine was still in bed. At nine o'clock she read her papers and her correspondence.

"Into the desert—alone?"

Julia, with her cravat in her gloved hands, smiled sweetly though she was very pale. "I had not thought of going alone, Madame," she replied with charming assurance, "I knew you would go with me."

On a chair by her bed was a wrapper of blue silk and lace. The comtesse sprang up and then thrust her feet into her slippers and stared at Julia.

"What are you going to do in the desert?"

"Watch!"

"Yes, yes!" nodded Madame de la Maine. "And your aunt?"

"Deep in a bazaar for the hospital," smiled Miss Redmond.

Madame de la Maine regarded her slender friend with admiration and envy. "Why hadn't I thought of it?" She rang for her maid.

"Because your great-grandfather was not a pioneer!" Miss Redmond answered.

The sun which, all day long, held the desert in its burning embrace, went westward in his own brilliant caravan.

"The desert blossoms like a rose, Therese."

"Like a rose?" questioned Madame de la Maine.

She was sitting in the door of her tent, her white dress and her white hat gleamed like a touch of snow upon the desert's face. Julia Redmond, on a rug at her feet, and in her khaki riding-habit the color of the sand, blended with the desert as though part of it. She sat up as she spoke.

"How divine! See!" She pointed to the stretches of the Sahara before her. On every side they spread away as far as the eye could reach, suave, mellow, black undulating finally to small hillocks with corrugated sides, as a group of little sandhills rose softly out of the sea-like plain. "Look, Therese!"

Slowly, from ocher and gold the color changed; a faint wavelike blush crept over the sands, which reddened, paled, faded, warmed again, took depth and grew intense like flame.

"The heart of a rose! N'est-ce pas, Therese?"

"I understand now what you mean," said Madame. The comtesse was not a dreamer. Parisian to the tips of her fingers, elegant, fine, she had lived a conventional life. Therese had been taught to conceal her emotions. She had been taught that our feelings matter very little to any one but ourselves. She had been taught to go lightly, to avoid serious things. Her great-grandmother had gone lightly to the scaffold, exquisitely courteous till the last.

"I ask your pardon if I jostled you in the tumbrel," the old comtesse had said to her companion on the way to the guillotine. "The springs of the cart are poor"—and she went up smiling.

In the companionship of the American girl, Therese de la Maine had thrown off restraint. If the Marquis d'Esclignac had felt Julia's influence, Therese de la Maine, being near her own age, echoed Julia's very feelings.

Except for their dragoman and their servants, the two women were alone in the desert.

Smiling at Julia, Madame de la Maine said: "I haven't been so far from the Rue de la Paix in my life."

"How can you speak of the Rue de la Paix, Therese?"

"Only to show you how completely I have left it behind."

Julia's eyes were fixed upon the limitless sands, a sea where a faint line

Julia's Eyes Were Fixed Upon the Limitless Sands.

lost itself in the red west and the horizon shut from her sight everything that she believed to be her life.

"This is the seventh day, Therese!"

"Already you are as brown as an Arab, Julia!"

"You as well, ma chere amie!"

"Robert does not like dark women," said the Comtesse de la Maine, and rubbed her cheek. "I must wear two veils."

"Look, Therese!"

Across the face of the desert the glow began to withdraw its curtain. The sands suffused an ineffable hue, a shell-like pink took possession, and the desert melted and then grew colder—it wanted before their eyes, withdrew like a tea-rose.

"Like a rose!" Julia murmured, "smell its perfume!" She lifted her head, drinking in with delight the fragrance of the sands.

"Ma chere Julia," gently protested the comtesse, lifting her head, "perfume, Julia!" But she breathed with her friend, while a sweetly subtle, intoxicating odor, as of millions and millions of roses, gathered, warmed, kept, then scattered on the airs of heaven, intoxicating her.

To the left were the huddled tents of their attendants. No sooner had the sun gone down than the Arabs commenced to sing—a song that Julia had especially liked:

Love is like a sweet perfume,
It comes, it escapes.
When it's present, it intoxicates;
When it's a memory, it brings tears.
Love is like a sweet breath,
It comes and it escapes.

The weird music filled the silence of the silent place. It had the evanescent quality of the wind that brought the breath of the sand-flowers. The voices of the Arabs, not unmusical, though hoarse and appealing, cried out their love-song, and then the music turned to invocation and to prayer.

The two women listened silently as the night fell, their figures sharply outlined in the beautiful clarity of the eastern night.

Julia stood upright. In her severe riding dress, she was as slender as a boy. She remained looking toward the horizon, immovable, patient, a silent watcher over the uncommunicative waste.

"Perhaps," she thought, "there is nothing really beyond that line, so fast blotting itself into night—and yet I seem to see them come!"

Madame de la Maine, in the door of her tent, immovable, her hands clasped around her knees, looked affectionately at the young girl before her. Julia was a delight to her. She was carried away by her, by her frank simplicity, and drawn to her warm and generous heart. Madame de la Maine had her own story. She wondered whether ever, for any period of her conventional life, she could have thrown everything aside and stood out with the man she loved.

Julia, standing before her, a dark slim figure in the night—isolated and alone—recalled the figurehead of a ship, its face toward heaven, pioneering the open seas.

Julia watched, indeed. On the desert there is the brilliant day, a passionate glow, and the nightfall. They passed the nights sometimes listening for a cry that should hail an approaching caravan, sometimes hearing the wild cry of the hyenas, or of a passing vulture on its horrid flight. Otherwise, until the camp stirred with the dawn and the early prayer-call sounded "Allah! Allah! Akbar!" into the stillness, they were wrapped in complete silence.

DRAKE AS A KING

Sir Francis Thought He Was the Monarch of California.

CROWNED BY THE INDIANS.

The Redskins Had Decorated Him With a War Bonnet of Feathers, but He Took It For the Real Thing in Crowns and Accepted the Title.

Hidden in the diary of Francis Fletcher, a sailor parson who acted as chaplain for the freebooters of Sir Francis Drake, is the story of the first box ever engineered by Californians.

The joke was on Sir Francis. Until his last day he believed the Indians of California had crowned him their king—king of California. As a matter of fact, all they did was to give him a feather war bonnet and perform some native rites before him, hoping thereby to get their hands in his gift box again.

It happened in June, 1559. Drake was looking for the mythical north-west passage after a successful year looting and plundering in the Spanish colonies. His ship, the Golden Hind, sprang a leak, and Drake put into a little bay, just north of the present San Francisco, for repairs.

An Indian paddled out to the ship in a canoe. He scattered feathers on the water and went through a lot of pantomime. Drake feared to land until he found out the intent of the natives. The one Indian went back to shore. Then, to quote from Chaplain Fletcher: "He shortly came again the second time in like manner and so the third time, when he brought with him, as a present from the rest, a bunch of feathers, much like the feathers of a black crow, very neatly and artificially gathered upon a string and drawn together in a round bundle, being verie eleant and finely cut. With this also he brought a little basket made of rushes and filled with an herbe which they called tobah, both being type to a short robe he caste into our boate."

Drake tried to give presents in return, but the Indian paddled away quickly. He took only an old cocked hat which some sailor had thrown overboard. The hat made quite an impression on the tribe apparently, for they all gathered around the possessor on the beach.

In three days' time Drake concluded the Indians were friendly, so landed his men and began to unload the ship. A fort was constructed as a matter of precaution.

While the crew prepared the Golden Hind for sea Drake visited with the Indians. A tale, apocryphal perhaps, says he took an Indian chieftain's daughter to wife. At any rate, he got on famously with the savages, aided, no doubt, by generous gifts.

As the time neared for his departure and gifts grew fewer, the Indians announced that they intended to give a festival for Drake and his party. Drake came in full armor, and the Indians danced and played games for his benefit.

At the close of the ceremonies the Indians signaled that Drake was to be honored in some way. First an Indian approached bearing what Fletcher calls "a scepter." Drake accepted this kingly accoutrement. Then a chain was placed around his neck, and amid great shouting a "crown of feathers" was placed on his head.

Drake saw no other meaning of the ceremony than that he had been chosen king. What they really did was give him a pipe, a belt of wampum and a war bonnet. Drake drew his men up in line and, with a great flourish of trumpets and drums, accepted the kingship of California. As a postscript he added that he made no claims to being an independent monarch. He was still a vassal of Queen Elizabeth. He set up a monument to that effect:

"Our general caused to be set up a monument of our being there, as also of her majesties and successors right and title to that kingdom—namely, a plate of brass, fast nailed to a greene and firme post; whereon is engraven her grace's name, the day and year of our arrival there, and of the free giving up of the province and kingdom, both by the king and people, unto her majesties' hands; together with her highness picture and arms, in a piece of siltence current English monie, shewing itself by a hole made of purpose through the plate; underneath was likewise engraven the name of our general."

The hoax was successful. After accepting the kingship Drake sent for a large assortment of gifts for his subjects.—Kansas City Times.

GEN. MEADE'S RANK

Writer Thinks He Has Not Been Accorded His Proper Place by Historians.

By J. A. WATROUS.

Lieutenant Colonel U. S. Army (Retired). HIS great achievements, towering military genius, steadfastness of purpose and his natural and acquired ability successfully to handle vast armies and win great battles, never losing a great battle, placed General Grant at the head of the long list of military heroes developed in the Civil war. He will hold that rank in history for all time.

But what of his lieutenants? It has come to be common in speaking of a few to give rank as follows: Sherman, Sheridan, Thomas and Meade. Other distinguished characters follow, but in this paper their names need not be recalled. Were one to say that Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade should follow the name of Grant in enumerating important characters in the army one would endanger himself to a mob. But would that be so far out of the way?

The greatest single victory won during the war was achieved under the leadership of Meade. Grant won no single battle that would compare with Gettysburg in importance and its influence in settling the mighty contest. Vicksburg, in its influence, ranked next to Gettysburg. Even Grant conceded that the battle of Gettysburg was of vaster importance and had greater influence in the work of crushing the Confederates than that of Vicksburg. Sherman won no single victory equal to Gettysburg, yet he will always be recognized as one of the greatest generals of his age, and justly stands next to Grant. Sheridan's victories, even the greatest of them, bear no comparison to Gettysburg. Thomas' splendid conduct at

Maj. Gen. George G. Meade.

Chickamauga and his great victory at Nashville will always be regarded as proof of generalship of an exceedingly high type. Yet they were not such victories as Meade won at Gettysburg, under the most trying circumstances—circumstances as depressing almost as those under which Thomas won his greatest battle, that of Nashville.

No one would suggest that the roll be called in this way: Grant, Meade, Sherman, Sheridan and Thomas, or as I think it should have been called from the start: Grant, Sherman, Meade, Thomas and Sheridan. I am only saying that which I hope will have some bearing in the future toward giving to Meade, the high rank his superb services entitled him to—the credit that is his due.

Venerated and Exalted.

Never before was there a Memorial day when so few veterans of the great war needed the proofs given of the underlying loyalty, gratitude and devotion of their countrymen. But never was there a Memorial day when so many Americans who never were soldiers had need of paying this tribute to the men who risked everything and often lost all that the nation might live in safety, power and glory and go on to wider service to the world, leading the march of mankind.

So the balance holds true. The ranks of the heroes are thinned by time, but the millions who reap where they sowed and rejoice in the fruits of their devotion and valor are a mightier host than ever. And in another sense there is an unending adjustment of changing conditions. There are fewer survivors of the heroic and terrible four years' struggle for the Union, but they are venerated and exalted as they never were when their ranks were full and their numbers made them a great power in the affairs of the nation.

THE GRAND ARMY.

Hark to the stirring sound
Of fife and drum,
As slowly up the flag-draped streets they come.

Once more the day rolls round
When, halting, weary, gray and glory-crowned,
These heroes of an epic grand,
These men whose hearts were stung by cannon flame,

Who fought the bravest foemen known
to fame
Until the glad truce came,
Pass in review before the land,
Memories bitter-sweet and deep
Thrill through the veteran's breast
As, wind-carried,
The nation's banner waves
Above the peaceful, flower-strewn graves
Where comrades sleep.

Soon they must all be tenting on one ground.
Before they go
"Across the river in the shade to rest,"
"Tis well that we, their sons, should let our steele know
How honored in our hearts they are and blessed."

URGES UNION OF AMERICAS

The President Makes Stirring Plea For World Peace.

PRaises Rivalry In Trade

Delegates to Financial Conference Hear Mr. Wilson Advocate Friendship to All Nations.

Washington, May 25. — President Wilson, speaking at the opening of the Pan-American Financial Conference, expressed the hope that the Americas might show the world the path to peace.

The president was loudly applauded by the delegates as he entered the Hall of the Americas in the Pan-American Union building, where the meetings are being held.

On the platform were members of the cabinet, while the audience included many high government officials in addition to the representatives of South and Central American countries.

The president declared the people of the Americas were not trying to make use of one another, but were trying to be of use to one another. He spoke of the "handsome rivalry," that he said was good for nations. The lack of the physical means of communication between the Americas, he said, stood somewhat in the way of the development of commerce and friendship.

In advocating more ships in Pan-American trade and the opening of new routes, the president said that if private capital could not soon establish such means of communication the government must undertake to do so.

Speaking for peace, the president said: "It would be a very great thing if the Americans could add to the distinction which they already wear of showing the way to permanent peace. The way to peace for us, at any rate, is manifest. It is the kind of rivalry which does not involve aggression. It is the knowledge that nations can be of the greatest service to one another when the jealousy between them is merely a jealousy of excellence, and when the basis of their intercourse is friendship. There is only one way in which we wish to take advantage of you and that is by making better goods."

At the end of the president's address he was applauded again. He remained in the hall while representatives of the different nations responded to his welcome.

Secretary Bryan, who followed the president, said that the nations assembled in the conference were neighbors, dedicated to a system of government with an identity of political purpose and a common political ideal.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., May 25.—Joseph Celie, aged thirty-eight, has been arrested for branding the arms of his wife with a red hot poker. Mrs. Celie, thirty-six years of age, preferred the charges.

Mrs. Celie was found scantily clad, with an infant in her arms, wandering about the city. She informed the police that her husband, angered during a quarrel, had heated the poker, placed it on her arm and burned her badly.

Celie did not deny the charge, but declared that his wife had "got what she deserved."

THOUSANDS DEAD IN LORETTE FIGHT

French Win Terrific Battle With Germans.

Paris, May 25.—"The capture by French troops of the German works at Blanche Voie (the White Way) on the evening of May 21 marked the victorious conclusion of our offensive on the 'massif de Lorette.'" is the opening sentence in the report of the French semi-official eye-witness of conditions at the front as given out in Paris.

"Loretteberg is a word which for the last six months has appeared often in the correspondence of the German soldiers," the eye-witness continues. "The imperial general staff attached very great importance to the possession of these heights. To conquer, defend and retake them, the Germans have received a formal order which is so expressed as to make it operative until the last was killed. In spite of the unusual difficulties of the ground and the desperate resistance of the enemy we triumphed. The battle of Lorette was a great battle and ended in a complete victory. In this part of the front fighting has been going on uninterruptedly since October, 1914.

"Thousands of dead testified to the desperate nature of the contest," the eye-witness goes on to say. "Facing the French was a formidable organization: lines of trenches reinforced by sacks of earth and cement and further protected by a double and triple system of barbed wire entanglements and other defenses, the whole protected by quick firing guns. At various points heavy artillery, carefully concealed, had been placed."

Lee Surrender Relics

Used Fifty Years Ago, When War Ended at Appomattox Court House

THE two pens that ended the great civil war are now in Missouri. Only once have they been dipped in ink since the memorable day when U. S. Grant and Robert E. Lee made use of them in the Virginia hamlet dignified by the name of Appomattox Court House. The present owner, Dr. E. P. Cronkite, a St. Joseph (Mo.) dentist, would deem it little short of sacrilege for the pens to be touched by any drop of ink destined to flow into ordinary sentences. The pens repose securely in a strong box in Dr. Cronkite's St. Joseph home.

The pens came to Dr. Cronkite from Mrs. A. B. Lawrence of Warsaw, N. Y., after the death of her husband, Colonel Lawrence, who in his lifetime was an indefatigable collector of relics. No better history of the pens probably is to be desired than the one written out in Colonel Lawrence's handwriting:

"The pens in this box, one a quill, the other steel, marked with the date April 10, 1865, are the ones used in signing the General R. E. Lee surrender papers in the Colonel Wilmer McLean house, where the surrender took place at Appomattox Court House, Va., April 9, 1865, and were given to me in the McLean house April 10, 1865, as souvenirs with a piece of the table on which General Lee signed the surrender dictated by General Grant. The piece of table was given to me the next day in my office in the sheriff's room of the courthouse by Colonel Wilmer McLean, with a certificate of its history. The sheriff was William Daniel Hix, now of Hixburg, Appomattox, Va., to whom I turned over the surplus surrender property for distribution among the poor and deserving of the vicinity of the surrender by verbal order of General Grant to me in the presence of Major General John Gibbon, president of the commission left by General Grant to close up surrender matters at the courthouse. The tagged piece of paper in which the pens are wrapped was part of a larger piece on the table on which the surrender papers were written and which I took from the table to wrap the pens in as they were handed to me by General Potter, our Twenty-fourth army corps chief of staff, for the valued souvenirs they were.

"These pens have never been but once dipped with ink and then at the soldiers' fair in New York city for my signature the evening General Grant was there. A. B. LAWRENCE."

The lamp pictured herewith stood in the McLean house at the time of the surrender and was undoubtedly used to light up the drafting of documents relating to the surrender, although the first papers were written and signed before dark. The lamp was sold recently in New York.

A fire of retribution and swift hate, All visibly advancing—with these we keep Unsullied in our breast and pure and white
The spirit of gratitude that may not sleep—
A nation's safeguard against shame and blight—
Since sacred memories and the tears men weep, Alone can keep a nation at its height.

PUBLIC ROADS

ACTUAL COST OF GOOD ROAD

Various Methods of Financing Road Building and Retiring Debts Discussed by Experts on Subject.

While it is frequently easy for a county to issue bonds and borrow money for improving the local highways, the raising of the money to retire those bonds at maturity is often not so simple. Many counties, in borrowing money for bonds, figure that the amount of money raised represents the total cost of the road, forgetting that the road must be maintained and repaired it, at the end of the term of the bonds, the county is to have anything to show for its investment.

The question of financing county road building is discussed fully in Department of Agriculture Bulletin No. 136, entitled "Highway Bonds," which is written by the office of public roads in collaboration with James W. Glover, professor of mathematics and insurance, University of Michigan. In this bulletin the authors discuss fully the various methods of financing road building and retiring debts for road construction, and also deal frankly with the actual total cost of a road during the life of the bonds. On the total cost of a road, the authors cite the following two examples as affording at least a basis for estimating the total minimum cost of a mile of road:

Bituminous macadam: Cost of construction ($10,500) under 5 per cent serial bond with interest for 20 years, $16,012.50. Cost of annual repair and maintenance ($600) for 20 years, $12,000. Total cost for 20 years, $28,012.50.
Brick: Cost of construction ($18,500) under 5 per cent serial bond with interest for 20 years, $26,426.73. Cost of annual repair and maintenance ($300) for 20 years, $6,000. Total cost for 20 years, $32,426.73.

The authors point out that the actual cost of building and maintaining a specific highway can be determined only after the character and volume of traffic and actual wear and tear have been studied for a series of years. The figures quoted above, of course, will not apply to ordinary macadam, gravel or clay roads, but in all these cases the interest on the bonds must be met, and there must be expenditures to maintain them in condition. The poorer the drainage and the less permanent the character of the road foundation, the greater must be the percentage that repair costs will bear to the first cost. Similarly, the question of whether the actual surfacing is designed to withstand the character of traffic and weather to which it is subjected also has an important bearing on what it will cost the county to keep the road in such shape that when the bonds are paid the locality still will have a valuable property to show as a result of its borrowing and repayment.

Most Helpful Signs.
One of the most helpful signs of the present time is the attitude of the farmer and the business man towards greater permanency in building and improvements. This is seen in road building, in the very widespread use of concrete on the farm and in the tendency towards fireproof buildings in all of the small cities. Truly there are some places where concrete can be used to good advantage on your farm.

Good Road Benefits.
Good roads broaden our sympathy, lessen distance and increase our usefulness.

THE KITCHEN CUPBOARD

DELECTABLE DAINTY. NOW that strawberry time is with us again a recipe for the delectable strawberry shortcake will be welcomed by every housewife.

Strawberry Shortcake.
Three cupfuls flour, two teaspoonfuls cream of tartar, one teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful salt, one egg, one and one-quarter cupfuls milk, one-half cupful shortening. Bake in a cake tin, smoothing dough out with spoon. When done split and butter top and bottom and set aside to cool. Wash and hull two boxes strawberries. Slightly mash one boxful; cut the berries of the other box in halves with scissors. The mashed strawberries are put between the cake, the others put on top of the cake, on which is a thick layer of whipped cream. Half the quantity may be used for a small family.

Below is given a recipe for pickle, that toothsome dainty which piques a jaded appetite:

Cabbage Pickle.
Take sufficient cabbage to fill a two gallon jar. Small, compact heads are best for pickles. The cabbage should be quartered and tied up to prevent the leaves from falling apart and cooked well in salt water until tender. Drain, and when cold press out all the brine. Cover them completely with cider vinegar and allow them to stand for several days or even a week.

When ready to make the pickle, take one gallon of vinegar, in which boil two ounces of turmeric, two ounces of cinnamon, a few pieces of sliced ginger root, one-quarter of a pound of white mustard seed, one ounce of celery seed, two pounds of brown sugar and half a cupful of meal mustard. Squeeze the cabbage carefully out of the first vinegar and remove the tang. Pour over them the boiling hot spiced and sweetened vinegar. Use in three weeks.

What Paul Wilson Did For His Family

PAUL WILSON was a plain man—just like you and me. He had a wife and a couple of kiddies, and he made four payments of $50 a year for AETNA Accident Insurance. Then Paul Wilson was killed in a train wreck. His policy called for $10,000, but it had increased $1,000 each time he renewed the insurance without increase in the amount he paid. And because he was killed while traveling the benefit was doubled. So Mrs. Wilson and the kiddies received $26,000. Be wise—

Which Was Which?

By EUNICE BLAKE

A young man walked into a gold mining town in the far west with pick and shovel on his shoulder and, approaching a couple of miners standing before a saloon, asked some questions as to whether it was worth while to do any prospecting in the country round about. One of the men replied to him, while the other kept a pair of steel gray eyes on him from under a sombrero hat as he ground hard on a quid of tobacco. When the young man had passed on the gray eyed man said to his companion:

"Well, that beats anything I ever saw before! I knew Jim Allison had cheek, but I didn't reckon he'd walk into this town barefaced like that after the hosses he's run off."

"Jim Allison! You don't mean that's Jim Allison?"

"Shore! I'd know him if his face was charcoal."

Within another ten minutes half a dozen men surrounded the stranger with drawn pistols and called on him to surrender. Astonished, he asked what he was wanted for.

"You can't brazen it out that a way in this yere camp, Mr. Allison. We'll see that no more hosses are run off by runnin' the biggest hoss thief of the territory up on a rope. It'll be on the other neck this time."

"Allison! My name's not Allison; it's Ruggles."

The disclaimer had no effect except on one man who had once seen Allison and doubted if this man were he, but the gray eyed man was so cocksure that the prisoner was hurried away and, since the sheriff was handy, was turned over to him.

It happened that the jailer's daughter, Annie Sweetzer, was visiting her aunt over the divide and one day received a letter from her mother mentioning among other things that the noted horse thief, Jim Allison, had been arrested and was to be hanged the next Friday. Mrs. Sweetzer spoke of what a decent looking young man he was and what a pity he should have sunk to horse stealing.

The day Annie received this letter a party of men rode into the place, and in their center was Jim Allison himself. They rode by the house where Annie was staying, and she was told who the prisoner was. She asked why he had been brought there instead of being taken to the mining camp, and was told that he had been run down with some horses in Stony Gulch. This set the girl thinking. Were there two Jim Allisons?

The same afternoon, Annie went home. The jail was a small brick structure back of her father's house, and on her arrival she went out to have a look at the prisoner. The moment she laid eyes on him she saw that he was very like the man she had seen in the morning; but, while the latter had a hangdog look about him, this one looked honest.

"Pop," she said, "that young feller out in the jail isn't a horse thief. He isn't Jim Allison neither."

"You, Ann, you mind your own business. Every time a good lookin' young feller is taken in you get soft on him."

"I tell you, pop, they got Jim Allison over at Aunt Martha's. I saw 'em bringin' him in."

The father had gone out of hearing before the sentence was finished. Annie went back to the prisoner and told him of the situation. He was to be hanged next day and there was not much time in which to act. The minds of the campers were made up that they had got the man who had been stealing their horses, and they could hardly wait till the next day to hang him. If Annie told them the story of the other Jim Allison they would attribute her evidence to be prompted by a desire to save the life of a man with whom she had fallen in love.

"You just wait," she said to the prisoner, "till tonight. I'll bring you a file."

"I see."

"That's the easiest way. And I'll bring you a bed comforter, too, for you to put over the lock while you're filin', so they won't hear you at the house."

Annie provided the file and the comforter, but that night she heard the filing, and, fearing others would hear it, she set up a moaning, declaring she had a bad toothache. When she was assured that the filing had ceased for good she quieted down and after midnight went out and unlocked the outer door to the jail, the key to which hung in the kitchen. The prisoner had done his part of the work and was ready to leave.

"Goodby, little girl," he said. "Quite likely you have saved my life."

"Where you going?" she asked.

"Any where to get away from here."

"You go over to where your double is. That's the safest way. They'll get you sure. If you go where they've got the real horse thief it'll be all right."

"You're a sensible girl. I'll do it Goodby."

"Oh, never mind the goodby; I'm goin' with you."

The man took her in his arms. Then they started out on foot and in the morning reached their destination.

There was no doubt on the part of the real Jim Allison's captors that they had got the right man, and Peter Ringles was cleared. When all was safe for his return to the camp he and Annie went back together. Those who had intended to execute a funeral gathered at a wedding.
